Fund developments and comments

Premier Alpha Growth Fund - Investment Manager, Simon King

September proved to be a very strong month for equities on a global basis and meant that the third quarter ended in firmly positive territory. Given that macro data across the globe was at best mixed, this strength appears to suggest that investors are becoming more comfortable with the various macro outcomes and are starting to focus on the underlying cheapness of equities and the continuing flow of positive news from the corporate sector. Certainly there appears to be a growing sentiment that equities are attractive under both of the growth scenarios i.e. if growth is good then equities will be the key beneficiaries and if it is bad then all of the major economies will benefit from a new round of quantitative easing. Whilst the former is a lot more desirable, as long as markets accept that the latter merely defers the pain and does not eradicate it, then both provide a backdrop for equities to make progress.

From a UK perspective, inflation continues to be a worry, particularly against a background of sluggish economic growth. But with highly volatile commodity prices and a weak currency, this is likely to remain a problem and there appears little in the way of alternative strategies. In the meantime, the market awaits the October spending review with baited breath. We continue to caution that the level of clarity and granularity that the market is expecting is likely to disappoint and that it will not be until mid-2011 that we have precise details on where cuts are going to occur.

The Fund enjoyed a much better month in September, posting returns comfortably ahead of its benchmark index. Some of the portfolio's holdings in the capital goods area started to perform well as the market slowly comes to realise that capital spend by corporates is continuing to increase. As such Cape, GKN and Invensys all posted major gains during September. With the Fund currently being quite narrowly focussed, with c. 30 holdings, relative performance is often driven by what we do not own, hence zero weightings in Vodafone and AstraZeneca more than offset the negative impact of not holding either Royal Dutch Shell or Xstrata. Our position in Barclays detracted from performance.

Whilst it is important that investors do not lose sight of the problems we are likely to encounter in 2011, particularly in the UK when tax rises and spending cuts really start to bite, September was a good illustration of how equity markets can make progress against a difficult economic background. Equities remain cheap both against their own history and other asset classes. Like any other area of value they can stay cheap for long periods. However, with the market yield for 2011 forecast to be close to 4% and the benefit of continuing share buybacks by many companies, investors are being paid handsomely for their patience. Unless there is a true double dip then company earnings will grow in 2011, maybe not as much as the 13% currently forecast, but certainly in the 5-10% range. Hence unless equities are to be further de-rated then expected annual total returns of 10% from equities are not unreasonable.

Despite our reluctance to take exposure to any stock with a high level of UK based turnover, there is a good chance that the run up to Christmas will be a positive one. This could be particularly true for UK retailers which could benefit from a reasonably buoyant consumer looking to beat January's VAT rise. The trick will be for investors not to be lured into domestically focussed stocks when the outlook for 2011 is so challenging.
